

The Morey Farm

By Fred M. Davis
 "That little grove means a lot to me," were the words spoken to me one day recently by Victor Saunders, manager of the Morey Farm, on Pigeon Hill, as he pointed through the window of his shop to the small lot of pine that stands directly back of his newly built house.

I watched the bellows of his force as he brought out flames that blazed and sparkled from the nearest wood pile and listened with interest as he sang merrily, beating time on the tuncful saw with the steady strokes of his heavy hammer.

The house just mentioned stands within the limits of the Morey estate, and is one of the most or part of the small array of help that work on the farm. The Morey Farm, in one sense, is a world of its own, as the land alone comprises something like three hundred acres and covers a large part of the town of Norway. The farm is located on the side of the hill, and is noted for its richness of soil, its slightly position as from this point, Mount Sprague and the Summit are clearly visible.

Hundreds of dollars have been spent on the farm, and nothing left undone to make this one of the most sanitary and comfortable places in the county. The stock on the farm at the present time comprises about twenty horses, a herd of cattle, about twelve-five or six sheep, and a few geese. The water supply is always available. Outside of the water for drinking purposes, the tank of water stands on the height of the hill, and the tank itself holds about two hundred gallons of water.

The large inclosures on the farm have a splendid capacity, and the water supply is always available. The water supply is always available. The water supply is always available.

The place has taken long strides in progress the past few years and affords a livelihood for, as I said before, a small army of men, and is the means of a boom to the state and a large circulation of money as one animal on the farm was recently purchased for the enormous sum of two thousand, two hundred dollars. The herd is of the Guernsey blood and consists of the very best that money can buy.

The Moreys, although of the quiet type, much more than could be said of their untiring efforts to put over a business that is a credit to the county at large.

"Wait a moment," they said, as I stood in the spacious grainery, while a man hand threw over the lever that put in motion the gigantic mixer, where the grain is mixed by the power of electricity.

I stopped that night at the home of the manager, Henry Gentry, where an evening of music was given. The evening was a success, and the farm, as he said, with untiring efforts and his interests of all concerned and by his kind invitation, he gains a true willing from every man, resulting in much being accomplished.

Founding iron is not all that Mr. Saunders knows how to do, he has had a life experience with his fiddle and bow, and during the noon hour, as most of the day, he stretched himself on the lawn, a house-warming was suggested.

After taking my banjo, Saunders tightened up his fiddle strings and pulled a line of jigs, while the old blacksmith, who vibrated from bow to stern and creaked like a creak. The boss joined in with a double shuffle that put a kick in the show and a rattle of boot-taps started that could easily be heard half a mile down the road.

I was glad to traverse old cross roads that led to the hill, where, as a boy, I would have played some thirty-five years ago. My visit being over, I was hurried away in a car driven by Walter Scott Truman, a steady employee on the farm, who works as general mechanic and machinist and I could not notice the greatness of the working man and that labor rules the world.

SOUTH HARRISON

Wardwells from Cambridge at Old Home Here—Mr. and Mrs. Ingalls from Springfield Recent Visitors.

Ruth and Rita Skilling of Bolster's Mills passed one day of last week with their little friends at the Merrow Home. ## UNCLE LEM'S SAYINGS

An interesting political contest is going on in New Hampshire. Ex-Gov. Robert H. Hall is trying to get Hon. George H. Moses out of the U. S. Senate and get in himself. Moses is the ablest man from New England in the Senate.

What a drop it would be from this able and influential leader to a man of this calibre.

New England seems to be infested with a sort of political parasites who now pop up as parasites whose chief qualifications appear to be party harmony, disturbers inheritors of wealth, and dog fanciers.

Let us hope that such will be speedily and left in comparative obscurity. "Every dog has his day," but only one.

This class of the dominant party dominated "The Wild Asses of the Prairie" are greatly in evidence in the Middle West. Senator Robert M. LaFollette is dead but his influence was sufficient to put his son in his place as Senator from Wisconsin, and there is "Five per cent."

Smith W. Brookhart of Iowa in Albert B. Cummings' place. How have the mighty fallen. These political nonentities will disappear when the people find out what the matter is and apply the right remedies.

The labor and transportation questions are two of the greatest ones of the day. They affect both West and South. Farmers cannot pay the high wages demanded and get a fair recompense over and over again. Many can't even make both ends meet. Conditions imposed by labor are too exacting to be patiently borne. Transportation rates are outrageous. A loaded car with grain from Chicago to Macon costs $300 or more. The cost before this era of high prices was about one quarter of that sum. But whoever pines into these matters to find remedies will for a season, lose votes. Small bore politicians take to cover. Big men brave the temporary storms.

There is one good sign on the political horizon. H. Johnson of California appears to be losing his grip on the Golden State. He opposed in the primaries for U. S. Senator, his colleague, Senator Shortridge, but was badly beaten. His star is setting and will probably go down in 1928. Had he carried California for Hughes in 1910 he might have been President of the United States.

Keep your political weather eye on Frank O. London. He made a splendid Governor of Illinois and has the confidence of the sensible farmers of the West. He would make a good president to succeed Calvin in 1928.

There is one man who could probably beat Al Smith in the National Convention of his party for president. Alton Pomeroy of Ohio would be a formidable candidate. He is an able man with nothing against him—Uncle Lem.

How to Save and Where to Live

One of a Series of Articles on Home Economics

People must eat, wear clothing and have a place to sleep, therefore they must have more money on these present needs than on any other. There are many reasons why a family should begin early to save. The first reason is that the future is uncertain and though the present is bright, it may become so uncertain that the savings are necessary for support in later years. It is a great risk to take, for disease and disaster come to the most prosperous. There are many financial troubles which arise in the lives of most families and considerable worry is prevented if there is a certain amount of money saved. The habit of saving through the months of the year is the best way to save. Of course, the more one saves the more one has for the future. There are several safe ways to realize interest on the money saved. One should not put money in a bank unless it is a certain amount of money which is not needed for current expenses. The interest on savings banks, or endowment policies, give a small amount of interest, but to the inexperienced person offers the safest method. The money is not lost, and the interest is a security in case of death. The money is not lost, and the interest is a security in case of death. The money is not lost, and the interest is a security in case of death.

Method of Saving

When a young couple start out in life they must put "savings" at the head of their budget for unless they persist in saving a certain amount of money they will have no money to live on. ## To Buy or Rent

Whether to rent or own one's home is a question which confronts most people in the young couple starting out in life. Young Mr. and Mrs. White were trying to decide this question and were greatly bewildered by the arguments presented on the matter. Finally they took pencil and paper and made a list of these statements on both sides of the question. The arguments against investing money in a home were as follows: A home is tied to one place. Mr. White might have an opportunity for advancement in another town or city, and due to the fact that the home cannot be removed, he might let this chance slip by. They might settle in a neighborhood which with the growth of the town might be made undesirable by business factories. Also there are many unexpected expenses, new sanitary regulations which require change of sewerage and the like. The value of property is very changeable. With the rise of a new industry a house may double its value, but at the same time let a factory be moved to another town and that same property value may drop to a point where it could not be given away.

A change in the size of the family may cause the present home to be entirely inadequate. A young couple do not want an eight room house, yet it is necessary for a family with children. Again how large is the large house after the children are gone, and father and mother are left alone. One of the strongest arguments advanced to the young couple was that the expense of building a home is very great. Economists tell us that the value of the house should bear a reasonable relation to one's income. This property is placed at not over ten times one's annual income for the owned home, and the rent of the house should not be more than 15% of the income. Therefore as Mr. White's salary is $1800 a year, they would be justified in expending $2700 in a home. In some localities $5000 would purchase a lot and build a small three or four room house without a cellar. This would be a very good investment. This would be a very good investment. This would be a very good investment.

The owned house gives the family a sense of social responsibility. It is a comfort going to remain in a town for several years they take a greater interest in town affairs. Also one can build additions, make repairs and alterations whenever necessary. Home ownership is a financial provision for old age, other investments may fail, but such property takes care of a considerable item of the cost of living. In the home children develop a sense of responsibility and desire to serve which is not so liable to be created in the rented house for which they have no personal feeling. From these statements the Whites realized that whether to rent or to own a home depends largely on circumstances, as the husband's occupation, the income, the size of the family, the value of the property, the kind of city, town, prevailing conditions and the personal attitude of the persons toward the owned home.

Certain Sanitary Standards
The Whites settled in a thriving small town in Maine and at the Women's Club the ladies studied certain standards regarding the social aspects of housing which are advocated for the rented or owned home in order that the living conditions of the people as a whole may be bettered. They brought forth the fact that sewerage gas is not directly dangerous to health, but that the movement of air is most important for comfort, therefore, there should be windows on four sides of the house in order that there may be good circulation of air. There should be town or city service in regard to pure water, sewerage and garbage disposal. That surplus ground should be planted with vegetables and flowers. This would decrease the cost of living, beautify the community, and improve the health conditions both by the outdoor labor it would furnish the people and the better health of all due to increase in consumption of green vegetables.

No room in a private dwelling should be less than eight feet high, and there should be at least one window in every room, preferably two. No cellar rooms may be used for living purposes. There should be separate bedrooms for boys and girls. At least one room for the common family life and this not used for sleeping.

In most homes these principles are obeyed which are necessary for the healthy home, therefore, it is taken for granted that every other home meets these requirements. This, however, is not true for in most every community, there are rented houses which have miserable sanitary conditions and overcrowding so that home life is made sordid and degrading. As the children grow from these homes are to be citizens of our town, it is the duty of the women to take an increasing interest in the town affairs. Form community welfare clubs and work to lift the standards of the people.

Maine in September

The summer is over so far as the hotels and resorts are concerned. The past few weeks have seen the army of vacationists who have been spending several weeks or months in Maine on their way home. They are leaving the state when the finest weather of the year is to be expected. September and the early weeks of October are really the best weeks the state has.

The reason for the early ending of the summer tourist business is the opening of the schools in this and other states. Most people leave their cottages, camps and boarding places in Maine with reluctance when the first of September comes around. Maine sets a very bad example by opening its schools so early. It's efforts should be to extend the vacation season as long as possible. Instead, in many cities and towns, it re-opens the schools and practically serves notice on the vacationists who linger that the time has come for them to go home.

In September, as a general thing, the mornings and evenings are cool, with a touch of fall in the air, but the days are warm, the air is clear and bracing and invites out of door activity. It is a period when there are not likely to be many of those sticky oppressive days when the humidity is high. The foliage is still green, the countryside filled with bright hued flowers and it is by all odds the best period of the year in which to go sightseeing.

Towards the latter part of the month the leaves begin to turn and the hillsides and forests present marvelous pictures painted in colors which no artist has ever been able to put upon the canvas. Many have declared that when Nature has added these colors to the landscape Maine scenery is not to be equalled anywhere in the world.

A great many people have come to look forward to visiting Maine in September and early October. They have complained because they have found many of the wayside inns and hotels closed or closing for the year, and have said that were the same accommodations for tourists provided during this period as are to be found in August, a great many more people would visit the State than is now the case.

At any rate, most Maine residents love to journey about the State in this month. They look forward to it as the finest month of the year and wonder how long it will be before some of their summer visitors come to appreciate it and prolong their stay here so that they may enjoy the good things Maine has to offer in September which cannot be duplicated anywhere else.—Press Herald.

POINTS ON POLITICS

About the only sure thing in politics is to be sure.

You cannot make a straight statement out of a crooked politician.

A man can study both sides of a question without sitting on the fence.

The ideal political plank has no knotholes through which politicians may crawl.

The average man's politics and religion are either inherited or accepted at second-hand.

Unless a man has a character that won't show dirt he had better keep out of politics.—Boston Transcript.
